Deregulation and Electric Choice FAQs

What does deregulation mean to me?

The utilities you use (natural gas & electricity) are made up of three different components – supply (generation), transmission and distribution. Until now, your utility company has provided all three components. Deregulation brings price competition to the supply component of the electric and natural gas markets, breaking up the monopoly that these industries have enjoyed for many years.

What is Energy Choice?

Energy Choice is a state sponsored program we are able to offer customers as a result of deregulation by the state. It enables you to buy your electricity from the supplier that offers you the most for your money, and then have it delivered by your utility. Your savings will vary depending upon the supplier you select, the amount of electricity you use and the price of electricity in the future.

What am I choosing?

Again, the three steps involved in providing electricity for your business are:

1. Generation: Producing and supplying electricity
2. Transmission: Moving electricity from where it's made to the wires that supply your neighborhood.
3. Distribution: Delivering electricity to your home or business through the network of wires that supplies your neighborhood.

Electric Choice gives you the power to choose your electric supplier (generation). Prior to deregulation, your utility company was the only option for generation. The transmission and distribution of your electricity continues to be regulated by the state and provided by your utility company through their wires and pipes.

What changes?

Once an electric supplier is listed under your account, you get an immediate rate reduction (after 1/1/2011 for Peco customers), price protection and budget certainty. Your utility continues to bill you, deliver your electricity, provide distribution-related customer service and handle emergencies. You will continue to pay your electric bill the same way.
